"A unique novella that's filled with mystery. I adored how the book is written as journal entries that the main character writes over a course of a thousand years, and is later found by archaeologists and translated...The entries are written so well and have such a clear voice it feels as if Kesi, the main character who wrote these entries, is a real person. [This is] impressive for an author to achieve in a character. I enjoy how the author took the 'vampire' and turned it into something so cool and unique. I like how the 'vampyres' in this book are creatures derived from the stars and were seen as gods among the Egyptians." JOCELYN REVIEW

The most unique and intriguing vampire book today.

In this compelling and unique adventure, written as translated scripts found by archaeologists, Sands of Time sweeps the reader back to ancient Egypt where we read the scrolls of Kesi of Giza, the "Nile's Graceful Queen," a hybrid blood drinker with an exciting and exceptional past.

From the sands of ancient Egypt, to the arms of a Roman soldier. From hiding in 13th century London, to dying in post Jacobean Scotland. And onward through Revolutionary France, this exciting novella is packed full of adventure, betrayal, mayhem and mystery as the first of Kesi's epic search for a way to share her bloodline begins.

This is a series that will delight vampire fans looking for a fresh take on an old genre. The historical aspect of the book will also thrill those looking for exploration into a past not told about in school books.

Christine began writing at the age of nine, penning and illustrating picture books, taping them together, and even creating a publishing company. In school, she could be found sitting in the back of the class, writing short stories. By 1992 she was professionally published in both nonfiction and short stories. In rare spare time, she likes to ride her horse, swim, do archery, acting, photography and auditioning for 'Survivor.'
